GRANT RIMER - Bio

Baseball is the most complex sport in the world. Coaching pitchers is like solving Rubik's Cube blindfolded.

When you're hunting for a great pitching coach there are only a few who know how to teach a smooth, fast, balanced delivery with a strong finish.

Grant Rimer is one of them.

Grant is a leader in Player Development in every aspect of the game, including pitching, hitting, infield, catching, and baserunning.

It would take about 200 pages to cover the ground. But here are just a few of the highlights of his illustrious career.

He's a creator and lead instructor for the B.C. Minor Coaches Caravan that tours the province every year teaching the game at the grassroots level. His resume looks like a rock band playing concerts in every city from Vancouver to Kelowna, from Campbell River to Fort St. John.

He created College Prep, the league that gives high school prospects a chance to strut their stuff in front of college recruiters and pro scouts.

He organized the 16U development camp featuring prestigious former MLB stars like Reggie Smith and Jim Lefebvre.

He spent three seasons with the Vancouver Cannons, a team that became a powerhouse in the Premier League and sent three players into professional baseball.

But, most of all, Grant Rimer has always stressed coaching the game the right way. His mission is to teach baseball using science and his vast experience to develop players to be the Best They Can Be.

Yes, he coaches to win. But never at the expense of injuring a player. Protecting a pitcher's arm is ALWAYS his priority. When your son or daughter has Grant Rimer as a coach you know they'll be taught how to play baseball at the highest level possible, and they'll also be protected.

Isn't that what coaching should be all about?
